A DOMESTIC CRASH.

The Energetic Boy and the Carman Meet on the Stairs.

[Copyrighted by Lee & Shepard, Boston, and published by special arrangement with them.] When a boy is in haste to go somewhere on his own account it is not exactly the time to send him elsewhere on your account. But a fond Danbury mother thought differently. She wanted her boy to carry some things down stairs when he thought he ought to be outdoors tickling the carman's horse. But he took the things. He put a mirror under one arm and a clock under the other. Then he took a chair in each hand and hung a pair of dishes around his neck and filled his pockets with tumblers and started for the stairs.

Just as he got to the top to commence the descent, the mirror slipped, and in an endeavor to recover it he lost his balance and went shooting down to the next floor, accompanied by all those articles, and making an earthquake at every bound. Coming up the stairs at the same time was the carman. He saw the danger, and had sufficient presence of mind to shout, "Hey, you, go back!" But the boy did not hear him, apparently, for he kept right on and by the carman, leaving that unfortunate man to follow on his head. The cries and crash brought the rest of the family to the rescue, and the disconsolate man, saturated with tears and amica, contrary to the advice of the carman, who suggested that he be driven into the earth with a mallet.

The changeable weather lately has been productive by many colds. Monuments are not always erected to the men who are buried in thought.

Reddell & Co's hardware store. Mr. Davis has built up a large business and by strict attention to the wants of his patrons expects to increase it in his new quarters. Gentle horses and fine buggies and carriages to hire at all times. Special attention given to the
